FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMB. 19.

PRINTING FOR THE THOUSAND MILLION. "Letter: Press Printing in all Languages;" such is the wonderful task which Messrs. Gilbert & Rivington, of London, undertake to accomplish, and the more the task is looked into, the greater the difficulties appear. Every imaginable shape do the characters or alphabets of the various nations take; some in bold and stately lines, as the Sanskrit, Bengali, and Tibetan; some in graceful curves, as the Singhalese, Burmese, Telugu, and Orissa; some a partect jumble of shapes, as the Guzerathi and Samaritan; the Cree, a mass of angles, turning every way; the Amharic, a number of grotesque figures waving tiny flags, the said flags representing various vowels; the Persian, imitating well the flowing reed-writing of the Esst; the Chinese -oh ! who shall describe the Chinese ! -squares and dashes without number-a language without an alphabet, for every word is a distinct sign and a complete fount would need about 40,000 different characters, of which some 3,000 or 4,000 are in common use. Shade of Father Caxton! could you have dreamt that the moveable type you introduced to England would ever grow to this? The the very lines travel erratically, for while the many agree with the good old English custom of reading from left to right, many go from right to left, as the Arabic, Syriac, Hebrew, etc., while the Chinese, Japanese, Mongolian, ctc., read downwards in columns from top to bottom, starting from the right side of the page. The Universal Syllabic type has been designed by the Rev. R. Hunt, to simplify the education of the "700,000,000 illiterate heathen." The Lexicon of that Prince of Arabic scholars, Mr. E. W. Lane (author of "Modern Egyptians," "Arabian Nights," etc.,) is a most voluminous work, which has been in progress for some fifteen years, and it is likely to be some years before the last volume is completed. The English and the fully-accented Arabic being well intermixed, and reading in opposite directions, the compositor has often to begin at both ends of the line and leave off in the middle. We have before us a series of large illustrated wall-papers, suitable for schools, etc., in the languages of India, China, etc. Many of our most enterprising merchants and manufacturers now issue their circulars and prospectuses in a combination of European and Oriental languages, and as the intercourse between nations increases, this becomes more and more necessary if we wish to circulate our goods in all markets. Another speciality of this firm is the Embossing type for the Blind, which presents that delicacy of touch necessary for finger reading. Truly the printing-press is the lever that raises the world !- Paper and Printing Trades Journal. DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.
